In the 19th century, the only way to travel across the world was by sea. The journey was long and difficult, and many people died. The only way to survive was to have a good ship and a good crew. The only way to find a good ship and a good crew was to go to the coast. The only way to go to the coast was to have a good horse and a good rider. The only way to have a good horse and a good rider was to go to the stable. The only way to go to the stable was to have a good cart and a good driver. The only way to have a good cart and a good driver was to go to the market. The only way to go to the market was to have a good pack and a good packer. The only way to have a good pack and a good packer was to go to the inn. The only way to go to the inn was to have a good room and a good innkeeper. The only way to have a good room and a good innkeeper was to go to the town. The only way to go to the town was to have a good road and a good roadmaker. The only way to have a good road and a good roadmaker was to go to the country. The only way to go to the country was to have a good field and a good farmer. The only way to have a good field and a good farmer was to go to the village. The only way to go to the village was to have a good house and a good householder. The only way to have a good house and a good householder was to go to the world.
